Brant Cooper and Patrick Vlaskovits have created a short but excellent book called The Entrepreneur's Guide to Customer Development, which provides a gentle introduction to the topic. You can buy it here: <http://custdev.com> or read my review here: <http://www.startuplessonslearned.com/2010/07/entrepreneurs-guide-to-customer.html>

When I first began blogging about entrepreneurship, it was not nearly as common an occupation as it is now. Very few bloggers were actively working on new ideas about entrepreneurship, and together we debated and refined these ideas online.

Dave McClure, founder of the venture firm 500 Startups, writes a blog at <http://500hats.typepad.com/>. 500 Startups has an excellent blog as well: <http://blog.500startups.com/>. Dave's "Startup Metrics for Pirates" presentation laid out a framework for thinking about and measuring online services that greatly influenced the concept of "engines of growth." You can see the original presentation here: <http://500hats.typepad.com/500blogs/2008/09/startup-metrics-2.html> as well as my original reaction here: <http://www.startuplessonslearned.com/2008/09/three-drivers-of-growth-for-your.html>

Sean Ellis writes the Startup Marketing Blog, which has been influential in my thinking about how to integrate marketing into startups: <http://startup-marketing.com/>

Andrew Chen's blog Futuristic Play is one of the best sources for thoughts on viral marketing, startup metrics, and design: <http://andrewchenblog.com/>

Babak Nivi writes the excellent blog Venture Hacks and was an early Lean Startup evangelist: <http://venturehacks.com/>. He's since gone on to create Angel List, which matches startups and investors around the world: <http://angel.co/>
